WORKING PAPERS

Omer F. Yalcin. “Empirical Study of Elite Networks with Wikidata”

Empirically studying political elites across large number of countries is difficult. This project uses Wikidata, a collaborative knowledge graph, to study elite kinship networks, and shows that kinship ties among the elite are more prevalent among authoritarian countries. (OSF preprint: <https://osf.io/yrfvs>)

Omer F. Yalcin. “A Network Theory of Coalition Formation”

This paper models the political coalition formation process as formation of an elite network, where individuals are free to choose their support ties given everyone’s exogenously given power and ideology.

Nitheesha Nakka, Omer Yalcin, Bruce Desmarais, Sarah Rajtmajer, and Burt Monroe. “The study of short texts in digital politics: Document aggregation for topic modeling”

We explore the implications for statistical topic modeling of aggregating relatively short documents into larger documents based on a natural unit that partitions the corpus using tweets by U.S. state legislators. Our results illustrate how document definitions can alter the findings in topic modeling.
